Town Hall

The construction was completed in 1884. The building was officially inaugurated in the presence of Émile Loubet, a Marsanne native and future President of the Republic, who was then a member of parliament and a departmental councilor.

Marsanne was the canton capital from 1790 to 2015, when the town was integrated into the canton of Dieulefit. The town hall was initially located in the Hillside community building, which housed numerous services, including the justice of the peace. The cramped quarters and the growth of the lower village led the municipal council, under Auguste Loubet, father of Émile Loubet, to launch the project for a new town hall. From 1884 onwards, all the services were established, and they operated there with few changes until the 1930s. On the ground floor, the vast hall of the "Salle des Pas Perdus" (Hall of Lost Steps) provided access to all the court services: concierge, clerk's office, judge's chambers, justice of the peace, and courtroom. The town hall offices were located on the first floor.
